Annette Zucco • CSYT

Annette discovered Svaroopo yoga in 2004. She found that being supported with props allowed her to release in the poses, and after just one class she was able to do poses that she was unable to do before. As she continued practicing Svaroopo yoga her chronic back and knee pain went away and she began to feel calmer and more centered. Annette has completed over 700 hours of teacher training through Svaroopo Yoga Foundation, is a Certified Svaroopo Teacher (CSYT), and is a certified Embodiment Yoga Therapist.

About Svaroopo Yoga

In Svaroopo yoga, poses are carefully chosen and sequenced to provide the release of muscular tensions in the core of the body along the spine. While in the poses you are supported with various props which allow the tensions deep within the body to relax and release without exertion. Svaroopo is a very gentle and meditative style of Hatha yoga. Your body will become more relaxed and flexible, Your mind will become quiet and calmer and you will begin to feel "the Bliss of your own Being".

Embodiment Yoga Therapy

Embodiment Yoga Therapy is based on the fundamental principles of Svaroopo yoga, which states that the muscular tensions at the tailbone and sacrum must be released before the rest of the body and the mind can be relieved of stress, tensions and pain. During an Embodiment session, the therapist uses specific hand position on the lower back to gently facilitate the release of the muscles in the core of the body. The client settles into a meditative state and a place of deep relaxation, which is both healing and restorative. Embodiment therapy is beneficial for someone who is recovering from an injury or surgery. An Embodiment session is a wonderful way for a yogi to deepen their personal yoga practice and is for anyone that would like to experience a deep state of consciousness and bliss.
